Tips when planning a team building event

- An understanding and appreciation of the values, needs, abilities and challenges of the team is a starting point in planning a team building event.
- Prior to booking a team building exercise, canvas the views and ideas of the members of the group, what have they done before, any particular interests or requirements?
- Take into account the age, culture and relative physical ability of the group. Match this to the relative activity of the team building product. Most of Beach and Bush's team builds are low impact and suitable for almost all groups.
- Discuss the desired goal of the team build with your consultant. Certain team builds target addressing specific group dynamic challenges.
- Attaining buy-in from the group members prior to arrival is always a good idea. This can be done by way of e-mail teasers or cryptic invitations, ask your consultant for advice.
- Choice of Venue is an important factor. The tone of the team build should be matched to the venue chosen. A choice between rustic or luxury is important in relation to the team building to be carried out. In addition travelling time is an important factor.
- Timing of the team building needs to be taken into account. Try to mix physical outdoor team building activities with more relaxing social team building activities.

Why Every Team Building Program should be Customised

- Every Team has different focus areas, challenges and requirements.
- One of the reasons why team building interventions often fail to address the requirements of a team is because operators assume a 'one size fits all' approach to each group.
- At Beach and Bush we always customise activities to ensure that the correct outcomes are focussed on and that each and every groups needs are addressed.
- A few of the outcomes that can be addressed through customised team building activities include: Communication, Collaboration, Competitive Spirit, Trust, Reaching Consensus, Motivation, Planning and Focus.
- Our team of consultants are trained to tailor-make each and every event booked with us.
